The bill before the legislature making the towns of Coventry and Columbia each bear one-half the expense of crestling and maintaining bridges between the two towns has caused somethins of a stir here and some of our citizens attended the hearing before the committee at the capitol leat Thursday. The same game was tried several years ago and falled. Columbia is a much smaller town than Coventry, but has more bridges to maintain than the latter. Surely the larger town should not shirk her responsibility in the matter of bridges.
